LONDON, November 10. LORD SALISBURY ON THE SITUA-TION.

Lord Salisbury, speaking at the Lord Mayor's banquet at the Guildhall, said that the country had lately had to face the danger of war, but happily the trouble had been settled owing to the great judgment and sense of France. Surprise was expressed that our preparations for war had not suddenly coased, but it was impossible to cease such preparations suddenly. One reason for not stopping them is, the present general temper of the world and the dangers surrounding us The entry of the United States among the European Powers is a grave event, and one not conducing -to peace, although likely to benefit British interosts. Lord Salisbury, then dilated on the fearful rapidity with which war, breaks out, and said that unless our great Colonial maritime empire was adequately defended by our navy, our power may suddenly come clattering down. Our armaments imply no dangerous enterprises; we abhor war, but must transmit our Empire, unimpaired, to

That, although the danger is not completely over, the exceedingly interesting explanation given at the Guild Half by Lord Salisbury must have struck a chord inthe heart of every British-American who values justice and fairplay:

That the reference to the adequate defence of our great Colonial maritime Empire by our Navy is an exceedingly graceful acknowledgement by the Mother Country to her some abroad, and the admission that the loss of the Colonies would mean the clattering down of Great Britain's power is also in the Marquis' best vein. POETICAL HUMOURS OF THE OXFORD EXAMINATION SCHOOLS.

Scribbling on the desks has from time immemorial been the favourite amusement of undergraduates who, by the stringency of College rules or from other causes, are obliged to go in for examinations without being sufficiently prepared for them. Three years ago I was in for Mathematical the most part raised topics I did not care to That here again the Premier very clearly discuss as I knew nothing whatever about them; so I found-plenty of time to observe how my more or less fortunate fellow-candidates disported themselves. I was very much struck by the looks of studious application worn by the desk-scribbers, and strolling past a few days later it occurred to me I might look in and take notes. Open, letters to the examiners seemed to possess a charm for some, many more seemed to fancy themselves at pen-and-ink drawing, but by far the greater number acknowledged their allegiance to the gentle Muse of Poetry. I was able to discover the authors of the unsigned effusionswhere the ink seemed fresh-by the tickets

Agencies for the sale of the new journal have been established at the principal coast ports and at Peking

The foregoing extracts will, we think, serve to commend this Chinese medical ournal to the enlightened sympathy of all triends of progress. Its existence indicates a more united and determined endeavour on the part of the younger generation of Chinese to free itself from the old sterepyied charlatanism and hocus-pocus; and or this reason it for no other the enterprise deserves to a cecent.

If this journal represents, advocates and disseminates 'Western Science' with no admixture of Chinese empiricism, it cannot fail to take a leading place among regenerating forces in the Chinese empire. The space at our disposal will not suffice for more than a brief notice of the contents of this first number. There are three leading articles. The first and second from western sources are on the subject of diagnosis and treatment of disease. The third, by the Editor, is an exhaustive enquiry into the nature and causes of bubonic plague. This last paper is by far the longest, necupying, as it does, about one third of the entire issue: and i is we think well worthy of attentive study. The subject is treated historically in a careful resume, from which native readers will ieurn readily the best known facts concerning the ravages of plague in the countries of the ancient world. This historical sketch forms an introduction to the descriptive portion of the article, in the course of which reference is mids to the outbreak of plague in Hongkong in 1894, and the invesigation into the nature of the plague bacillus y Dr Yersin and others. As respects the methods suggested for guarding against the scourge the counsels given seem to be based on the most recent conclusions reached by specialists. The article is admirable throughout and will we hope be read with advantage by some who have it in their lower to use the means suggested for the safe guarding of their own and others' lives.

The notes of osses treated will prove beloful to the limited classes for which they are written, viz. - Chillege students of western medicine who are in a position to learn from the work of the operating room and bonnital ward, We are glad to observe the first of series of articles the object of which is Saying that, he shook me by the it lifts our profession above all others, leaving the memory of some of us worthy of admiration, whatever, be the future of war and of armies. No man ever owned in a higher degree that inner peace of mind which springs from a feeling of hely Daty, and that modest indifference of a soldier to it matters little whether his name be famous or not, provided that the public weal prospers. I saw him write one day: 'The first wish of my life is to maintain my country's independence, and I would prefer to have my body added to the rampont of my native land, than dragged in useless pomp through a staring crowd. My life and my strongth are for England. Don't allude to glorifying my dangers. His sadness was deen, but full of grandeur; it did not hinder his continual activity, and he gava me the measure of what an intelligent man ought to be, practising the art of war not as one who was ambitious, but as one who was an artist, judging it from an outaids point of view, many times scorning it, as did Montecerculti who, when Turenna was slain, withdrow, disdaining to wage war against an ordinary antagonist. But I was still too young to understand all the marits of this man, but what took firmest hold own country, a rank equal to his. Whole leaw the Kings of Spain and Naples ask for his protection, when even Napoleon was stirred at the idea that Collingwood was in the Indian Ocean, I got as for as wishing as strongly as I could to escape, and I pushed this herry to realise the ame pltiable stage.

Mr. W. G. Dontley, late buildmister West Yorks. Regt, writing front Newcastle, New South Wales, montions that he new holds the post of bandmaster of the 4th N. S. W. Infantry. He says :- I have some very good material in my band, and am busy ransforming it from a brassito a reed hand. Mr Bontley also says : "I have every hope of forming a Musical Society here. A Musical Union existed here once, but collapsed for various reasons: and I think it my our portunity. His friends in Singapore and Hongkong will be glad to hear Mr Beritley has cettled down in what he finds to be a suitable sphere of musical activity. A Newcastle paper, in the report of a Military Smuke Concert, eave :-

An excellent programine was arranged, the 4th Regiment Band contributing a colection from The Pirates of Penzance, and the song 'The Village Blacksmith, with curhonium solo. Both numbers were excaedingly well rendered and much appreciated. This is the first occasion under which the band has been heard in public since the new bandmaster took change of items performed lest night augur well for master of the West Yorkshire Regiment ('the Prince of Wales' Own') gave a clarionet colo, 'Scotch Fantasia' (Lasarus), and in response to an oncore played Meyerbeer's 'Shadow Song,' from 'Dinorah,' Both numbers were played with musicianly skill, the first particularly being one of the best if not the best, clarionet soles yet played in this oity. Every note was produced with amazing purity and sweetness, and at the close the player was veciforously applauded. Mr Bentley's work stamps him as a musician of a very high order, and his presense in this city is a valuable acquisition to the musical talent of Newstatle." Temperature. (Tuken at Meters Mulconer & Co. Promiss, Queen's Road.) Hongkonn, Nov. 14 1898; 1 Patting in 20:18 Cham in THERMOMETER AND AND THE 3 Same in The (Wes bulb) & a.m. Es
